New Director Introduction

Katherine Chansky, will be taking over from current library director, Patricia Sahr. Katherine's most recent job was as Special Collections Reference Librarian for the Rhode Island Historical Society in Providence, Rhode Island where she worked with historic manuscripts and rare books.

How does a person with roots in the capital district and a professional life in New England come full circle back? The answer in this case is family: Katherine's family has lived in nearby Columbia County for a long time and she still has family in Claverack running a pick your own apple and pear orchard. When she is not in the library she can be found visiting local history sites, local museums, and in warm weather she will be outside gardening or jogging along a country road.

Katherine's library background is in local history and adult reference. After earning her MLS at SUNY Albany in 2000 Katherine went on to work on the reference desks of the Saratoga Springs Public Library and the Crandall Public Library. At Crandall Library in Glens Falls, NY she coordinated the writers' series, inviting poets and novelists to give readings in the library. She co-edited a publication of memoirs written by Crandall library patrons. From 2007 to 2011 Katherine was in charge of the Grems-Doolittle Library of the Schenectady County Historical Society. She worked closely with a dedicated staff of volunteers to catalog important collections of local history and genealogy and set up many programs drawing on historical themes.

Katherine is looking forward to working with the library staff, volunteers and Friends of the Library on upcoming programs, and collaborating with community partners on special events in Nassau. Katherine believes the library offers everyone in the community free access to information for education and for entertainment. It is a learning lab for young people and a "village well" for adults to socialize and become informed. A good library has an open door and comfortable chairs. Nassau Free Library offers all this and more. Katherine hopes to continue the excellent service the library already provides.
